

Cotton: World Markets and Trade

Global Production and Consumption Both Forecast to Rise in 2016/17 Marketing Year

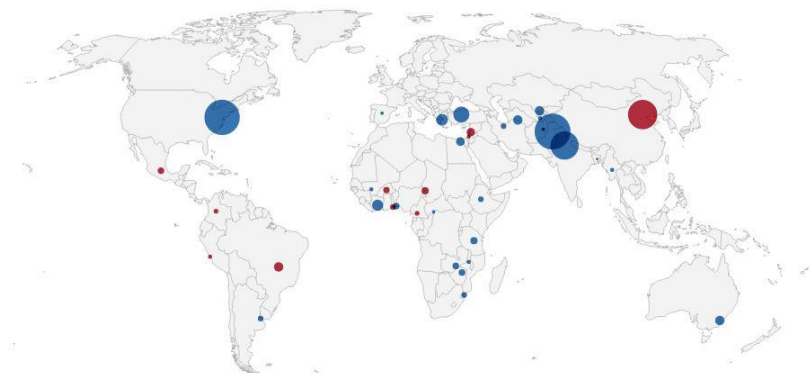

USDA's first detailed forecasts for the 2016/17 marketing year indicate substantially higher production, alongside a more muted increase in consumption, but still yielding the second consecutive year of declining global stocks. Nearly the entire decline in stocks is forecast to occur within China, as reserve sales in the upcoming year and recovering mill use lead to a 6.6-million-bale reduction in stocks. Outside of China, stocks are expected to rise slightly after a year when stocks in many major exporters, other than the United States and Australia, have become very tight. Global trade, meanwhile, is expected to slacken slightly as Pakistan's production recovers and China's reserve sales continue, while growth in major importers such as Vietnam and Bangladesh slows slightly.

The recovery in consumption is based on continued growth in Vietnam and Bangladesh and a resumption of growth in China. Ongoing reserve sales and the continuation of current domestic support policies for cotton will allow lint prices within China to remain well below the high levels seen in recent years. Meanwhile, slower growth in other major consuming countries is a corollary of faster growth in China, as Vietnam in particular is expected to spin less yarn for export to China in 2016/17.

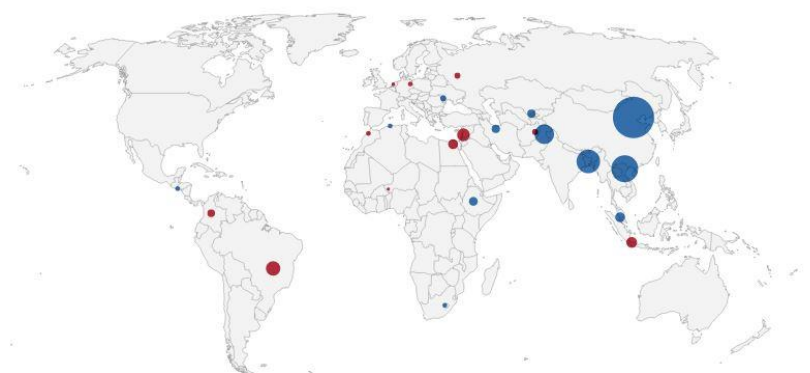

On the production side, the extraordinarily poor conditions which reduced yields in Pakistan, parts of India, and the southeastern United States are not expected in 2016/17. In smaller producers, such as Egypt, Turkmenistan, Turkey, and some West African countries, production is forecast under more favorable conditions and up from 2015/16. This higher forecast production, alongside supplies made available from China's state reserve, is expected to pressure world cotton prices in 2016/17 and therefore enable more yarn spinning.

Change in Production, 2015/16 to 2016/17

The map at left shows changes in production by country. As can be seen, large increases in production are forecast for the United States, India, Pakistan, some parts of Central Asia, Turkey, and Greece, as well as more moderate production increases throughout East Africa and parts of West Africa, as well as Australia. Meanwhile, production declines are expected in China, Brazil, and Syria.

Change in Consumption, 2015/16 to 2016/17

Use is expected to rise in China after 6 consecutive years of decline. Although rates of growth will be slower than in recent years, Vietnam, Bangladesh, and Pakistan are still expected to see consumption growth. On the other hand, consumption is forecast to decline in many countries around the world, including Brazil, Indonesia, and Syria.

Overview

For 2016/17, production is forecast up substantially on recovering yields. Consumption is forecast up moderately, especially in China. Trade is forecast down as production recovers in major 2015/16 importers such as Pakistan. U.S. production is forecast to rise on higher yields, leading to substantially higher exports as well. The U.S. season-average farm price is forecast down 1 cent from the 2015/16 forecast to 57 cents/pound.

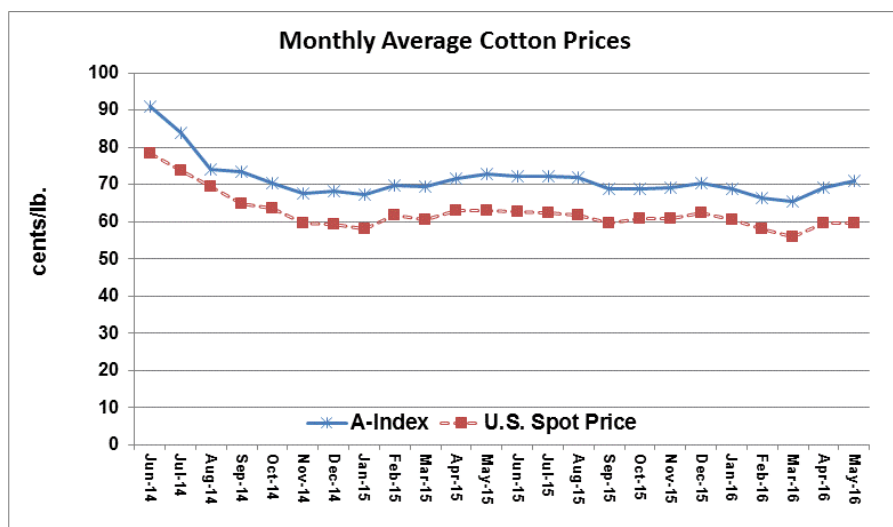

For 2015/16, world production is lowered slightly. Global consumption is lowered significantly, especially in Asian countries such as Vietnam and Taiwan, partially offset by an increase in Turkey. Global trade is down due to sharply lower imports by China and Vietnam, partially offset by higher imports in Pakistan and Turkey. U.S. exports are reduced 500,000 bales to 9.0 million, while production is revised marginally upwards. The U.S. season-average farm price is lowered by half a cent to 58 cents/pound.

The A-Index and U.S. spot prices continued to show recovery, led largely by movement in the futures markets.
